

New Jdeideh 01-88 33 88

Germany : 0190.648091
Great Britain : 0905.6460002

News

send to a friend print article

Nowheristan emperor spreads wings to Belgrade, Istanbul

October 11, 2006

With his fashionable Beirut club throbbing again to the popular Music Hall fusion of sounds after being closed by the Israel-Hezbollah war, self-styled 'Emperor Michel I of Nowheristan' is now ready to expand his kingdom.

In his sights are the East-West cultural melting pots of Belgrade and Istanbul.

The Lebanese businessman -- real name Michel Eleferiades -- dashed to Belgrade in 1999 on one of the last flights so that he could live like a Serb through the NATO bombing.

"The Serbs are an interesting, crazy people, a lot like the Lebanese," says the 36-year-old entrepreneur, painter, poet, music producer and would-be founder of a new member of the United Nations.

"As for Istanbul, what I love is the mix of minorities. For me, it is a kind of lost golden era of the East that has vanished in places like Alexandria," Egypt's once cosmopolitan city on the Mediterranean.

"You have this blessed mix of minorities, switching from one language to another. They understand the East and the West," says the polyglot of Greek origin whose own family fled Turkey in the 1920s.

Eleferiades plans to open Music Hall in Belgrade and Istanbul within the next 12 months.

Friday February 23, 2007

- ..... (.....)
- .. ..... (.....)
- ..... .. ..... (.....)
- Nations Seek to Ban Cluster Bombs (Associated Press)
- ..... ..... (CNN)
- ..... ..... (.....)
- Lebanese hostage escaped (Reuters)
- ..... 8 ..... (.....)
- ..... ..... (CNN)
- ..... «.....» ..... «.....» .. ..... (.....)
- ..... ..... (..... - .....)
- ..... ..... (AFP)
- Lahoud sort un livre, sa femme poussée vers la sortie (20Minutes.fr)
- ..... ..... (.....)
- ..... ..... (.....)

Thursday February 22, 2007

- ..... (AFP)
- .. ..... : ..... (tayyar.org)
- ..... ..... (tayyar.org)
- ..... ..... (.....)
- .. ..... (.....)
- ..... ..... (CNN)

"People have been begging me to bring the concept to Dubai but I'm not interested. That place just has no soul, but I hope it will one day, and then I may go there," he says.

His hugely successful Music Hall in central Beirut is an 800-seat theatre fitted with lounge sofas and low tables -- converted from an old cinema -- featuring an array of talent from Europe, Cuba and the Middle East.

This summer's war kept the club closed for two months, during which the eclectic mix of Cuban, Lebanese, Palestinian, Swiss and gypsy artists evacuated to Jordan, on full pay.

In one of his many incarnations, apart from having also lived in Cuba and France, the hyper-energetic Elefteriades himself is an honorary gypsy and is often invited as a guest speaker to European seminars on their culture.

On top of making money and promoting culture, he is passionate about politics and his utopian country, complete with a constitution and embassies, the first of which is located outside the club. He plans to issue passports.

"Being from nowhere makes me at home everywhere," Elefteriades explains.

Nowheristan would "create a new culture that takes the best from all cultures, arts, archaeology ... without any religious barriers. The official religion is atheism but you can adore whatever you like," he says.

Elefteriades' 250 employees address him as "altesse" (highness) and he regularly reviews the troops in a lineup, with military salutes exchanged.

For him, "The East does not have discipline. It has spirituality and imagination, but needs the West's discipline. This is what Hezbollah does so well," he says, not hiding his admiration for the Shiite militant group.

"Look at this club, I have alcohol and sexily-clad guests, just a kilometre or so from the edge of the (Shiite) southern suburbs, but they are tolerant. Even with my heavy atheism."

Ever the bohemian in appearance, Elefteriades wears his hair long, in a pony tail, flowing and brightly-coloured silk scarves, baggy black pants like the Druze, silver bracelets and his beloved canes which he twirls like a master.

Married to a Russian former rhythmic gymnastics champion, Ludmila Batalova, they have two sons.

Surprisingly, he is a teetotaler. "I am a very excessive person. So I would have smoked five packs a day and been alcoholic," admits a man who receives dozens of SMS texts each day from fans around the Arab world and beyond.

He has a no holds barred approach to politics that he says has almost cost him his life, having escaped assassination bids and been forced to seek asylum in the footsteps of his favoured politician Michel Aoun.

The former warlords from the 1975-1990 civil conflict, many of whom now hold high posts, "can play the innocents but they can not make us forget", he says, bemoaning the lack of a South Africa-style truth and reconciliation commission.

He signed up as a volunteer to fight in General Aoun's failed "war of liberation" against Syrian troops in the late 1980s, fled to Paris and returned in 1992 to lead a militant "resistance" against the Syrians.

For some, Elefteriades is an eccentric and megalomaniac who lives in a fantasy world. For others, he is a genius and Che Guevara-like icon.

"I see things big. If that is a megalomaniac, fine, as long as I am not harming people," he says, with a hint of mischief in his eyes. "My greatest work is my life. Nothing is ever enough. I need to live an extraordinary life."

Elefteriades says he pretends to be an emperor "because it's fun" and creative, just like the elaborate ceremonial costumes he orders from India. "I'm a successful businessman and artist. I guess I'm a schizophrenic."

In the field which he co-pioneered during the 1990s, however, he is no longer enamoured with the

■ Italie: Prodi a présenté sa démission après l'échec de sa majorité au Sénat (AFP)

■ ..... (tayyar.org)

■ ..... 19 .. "....." ..19 .....

■ ..... (..... - .....)

commercialised version of world music. "It's become like Campbell Soup, they serve it in cans. I hate that."

RANDOM ADVERTISEMENTS PROPOSED BY GOOGLE.COM

Join FPM | Contact us | FPM charter | tayyar.org team | Daily FPM Activities | Advertise on tayyar.org | Links

651 visitors Online